the peak yesterday by rolling the lust of the arena. By concentrating Baumann leading the attack, they drove Bob Groom to the dug-out after the fifth with seven runs over, and then turned the rest of it over to Nick Cullop, the Chilhowie southpaw. Nick drifted with the tide until the ninth, when he shortened his stride, and Jimmy Austin's home run produced two Brown-coated tallies. But they were not enough, the scrimmange closing at 7 to 5.

The last Brown contest closed out the first Western invasion, and this afternoon the rising Yanks will attempt to lift two patches of hide from the Red Sox, the first game starting at 1:30. As the Red Sox are now pressing Donovan's young men closely for third place, the double-decker should be a rousing affair from first to heir fire in two rounds, with Pipp and Team on the Rise.

A slow start with the Western clubs had the home cast crossing the Dutch first six games with Chicago and Cleveland, but began to brace up when the Indians moved on to Washington. The Yanks dropped only one battle to the Tigers and Browns, winning three and tieing one. This is in the nature of a decided improvement from the start, and may mean a good deal or nothing at all for the Red Sox series, such being the uncertainty of our national frenzy.

*Raited for Russell in the tenth finding the most cheering feature now is that the team is hitting. Even with J. F. B., of Trappe, Md., out of the cast they are laying with robust vigor up against opposing pitching. Yesterday the Donovani entry continued its blasting out process with Brown pitchers operating as unwilling targets. The attack was not a heavy one all through the game, but it was sharp and decisive in two innings, backed up with a lot of power. Wally Pipp, after a belated start, is coming back where he belongs. His batting was one of Wednesday's features, and yesterday he whaled out a single and a triple. Still another wallop of Pipp's would have been good for three bases if Miller had not planted his spikes out by the right field exit, where Wallie's only chance was to punch one into Eighth Avenue. While Baker is resting his rusty knee, Paddy Baumann is driving in runs by the hogshead. Paddy drove four of his mates and scored twice himself in the Brown final, participating in no less than six of the seven runs.

No wonder Fielder Jones left town No wonder Fielder Jones left town last night frothing at the mouth. In the closing battle the Browns made cleven hits to the Yankees' eight; they made but one misplay, while the Yanks were making four, and yet Nick Cullop had no trouble winning his fourth battle of the year. The score would never have been close if the crafty citizen of Chilhowie, Va., had not decided to drift in the last inning or two didner to drift in the last inning or two flates. citizen of Chilhowie, Va., had not decided to drift in the last inning or two with a heavy lead to float on. Nick had the visitors stopped tidily enough until his club was safely out in front, and having a wise bean he could see no reason in overworking his wing under these conditions.

There was very little left to the game after the first inning. Facing Bob Groom, Gilhooley opened with a double. Magee sacrificed and Gihooley scored, the others advancing when Shotton muffed Gedeon's short fly. Baumann's single scored Gilhooley and Gedeon. Pipp prodded a long triple to right centre, scoring Baumann, and Wally the walloper counted a breath later on Lute Boone's sacrifice fly. With four runs to work on, Cullop breezed along his way a score of 8 to 4.
